Modern society can scarcely form a conception of the extent to which fruits and flowers were cultivated in ancient cireece; not merely for the sake of their beauty when beheld in the garden, but on account of the immense use made of them in religious ceremonies, as well as them in religious ceremonies, as well as in the circumstances of daily life. The lover crowned himself with flowers when he went to visit his mistress, hung gar-lands of flowers upon her door, and adorned with wreaths the statues of the divinities who were supposed to preside over love or marriage. Scarcely any one entered a temple uncrowned, and accord-ing to the character of the deity wor-AUTHORIZED BY and according to the character of the deity worshiped there the flowers of the wreath were changed. Again, when the Athenians repaired to the theater, which connians repaired to the theater, which contained an audience of between twenty and thirty thousand persons, nearly every one were a garland on his head. At private parties, likewise, when they dined or drank together, their brows were decked with flowers, while the apartments, in some instances, were covered a deeply with roses that they reclined upon them as upon sofas. This taste, which prevailed more or less throughout the whole country, as well as in Magna Grecia, Sicily and Asia Minor, may convey some idea of the extent of floral enlineation, which everywhere constituted an important branch of industry, just as the cultivation of roses still does in parts the cultivation of roses still does in parts the cultivation of roses still does in parts of Central Egypt and the northern proveners of India. In these eastern countries wast quantities of roses are needed for the manufacture of attar, the most asting and delicate perfume ever invented by man. In the present day the Greeks convert roses to several uses not much thought of in the West. At Athera for notance, for notance, and accessors are present of the control of th ens, for instance, is made a conserve of roses, which may be reckoned among the most delicious articles of luxury that can be imagined, being equally remarkable for caste and scent, as well as power of stimu-lating digestion and promoting health. Whoever has tasted the apples of Greece, Wheever has tasted the apples of Greece, will readily believe the extent to which they were exported from that country in antiquity. So, again the pears, the pomeranat state figs and the watermelons, which cool the traveler's lips as he toils through the fiery hollows of the Morea, have slways been esteemed the finest in the Levant. But what in commercial times are regarded exclusively as articles of profit, were at an early period of the of profit, were at an early period of the world's history looked upon from a more poetical point of view. It was doubtless the sight of oranges, when by some Grecian wanderer they were beheld for the first time on the warm and lovely slopes of Mount Atlas, that formed the germ of the myth about the gardens of the Hes-perides, and caused the trees that bore them to be stolen from the African shores, and acclimated among the Hellenes. Even now, when the thing is of daily oc-currence, the view of an orange or citron grove is one of the most beautiful that can be imagined, some of the fruit peap-ing through the green foliage like golden spheres; others, partly the color of the leaf, partly yellow; while and abundance of expanded or unfolding blossoms all the whole atmosphere with intoxicating fra-trance. Experience proves what might grance. Experience proves what might otherwise be attributed to the fancy, that the soil of Africa is so sweet that everything planted in it acquires an additional delicacy of flavor. Thus, pear trees transplanted from Malta to the gardens of Maronsi, a villiage about six miles from these set only orders prove delicant. Athens, not only produce more delicious pears, but begin to bear the very first season. If such be the case now, when passengers on the stage which was robbed on last Sunday night was one lady. She had passed about 22 summers and was a resident of Gilroy. For some little time she had been corresponding with a resident of Grass Valley, a miner and a most excellent man. The result was an engagement of marriage thought. most excellent man. The result was an engagement of marriage, though the parties had never yet met. After the robbery, and on the arrival of the stage at Grass Valley, the prospective bride and groom met and the wedding took place. Both were happy, and so continued until the next morning, when the bride claimed that she was crazy, and that she knew nothing watever of the marriage; that all was oblivion to her after the robbery, except that she had dreamed in robbery, except that she had dreamed in the night that she was carried off. Her manner was excited; one minute was in tears and another in smiles she was in tears and another in smiles. Preacher and neighbors were called in, and all thought she must be crazy; but in her more lucid moments she intimated that the miner was "not so well fixed" as she expected to find him. All agreed that under the circumstances it agreed that under the circumstances it would be well if the marriage could be annulled; but how to do this was the question. Pending the discussion the young lady packed up her Saratoga and left Grass Valley for her home. The important question is yet unsolved.—[Nevada Transcript, August 2d.

An eminent merchant, when quite young, and before he knew anything of the business, succeded after many trials in finding a place where he had to do mental tasks for his board only. He was not, like some young men, careful to earn no more than his pay, but disre-garding all such considerations, he went to work and made himself generally useful to all—was up first, made fires swept rooms, and did everything that the swept rooms, and did everything that the other young men shunned. At the end of the year he had rendered his services so valuable that he had good offers from other places—but no one could spare him. He was placed in a higher position and in a few years became a partner in the business. But it must be distinctly observed that he was willing to begin at the bottom of the ladder.

"Fourtees years for stealing a horse and five years for stealing a man is the schedule of penalties in Texas." This looks a little curious at the first blush, but you must remember that, while a horse will cost you a hundred dollars in Texas, you can buy a man—a member of the Legislature, for instance—for one-third of the amount.—[Courier Journal.
